I feel like joining the International Court of Justice is going to be a very great chance for me to experience something completely new. Due to my experience in previous MUN conference I had to debate as countries such as UK and Turkey or New Zealand, which have very different views on issues such as women rights. Over time I learned to listen to both sides on the issue and combine that with what I researched earlier. Furthermore I like following the news and have developed good analytical skills over my school and MUN career, which will help me to analyze and observe the case. I feel after six conferences I am ready to experience a new type of "debate". I hope I will be able develop some new skills in ICJ.
